Stormin Productions to Offer Voiceover and Music Services

Local musician offers businesses ways to enhance their creative message

Albany, New York – December 17, 2008 — Michael Normandin, a local musician with over 30 years of performance and recording experience, has launched Stormin Productions, offering businesses voiceover, music, and other production services.

Stormin Productions offers all businesses a way to enhance their competitive advantage by using the power of voice and music to enhance their creative and marketing messages. These voice and music services can be used in company phone systems, music on hold, multimedia presentations, training materials, website documentaries, radio commercials and other electronic media, training materials, and audio books. In addition to working directly with local businesses, Stormin Productions can collaborate with other creative agencies and companies by providing music and voiceover services for their clients.

“We are not looking to compete with professional recording studios, design or ad agencies, management consulting companies, or marketing agencies,” said Normandin. “Instead, in those cases, we would welcome the opportunity to collaborate with them by offering creative and professional voiceover and musical services to ultimately give their clients a creative and distinct-sounding competitive advantage.”

Normandin combines his musical background with previous experience as a small business owner providing computer sales, networking, consulting and training. As a computer systems engineer, he welcomes computer-related and technical materials, and hopes to use his business and musical background to establish a niche with local computer and technology companies. He has previously done work for WMHT's RISE program (newspaper readings for the print disabled), corporate phone systems, and commercials for fortune 500 companies.
